Dear Hiring Team,

Railway makes deploying logic feel like an operating system for builders — and that product needs designers who treat infrastructure complexity as a UX problem, not a theme polish task. I am applying for Senior Product Designer because I want to own workflows with engineers in a high-ownership, globally distributed team.

I am a Senior Product Designer with 10+ years in product and 6+ years fully remote. English C1. Portfolio: <https://neolissa.github.io/polina-tsoy-designer/en/>

- WakeupWarrior, rebuilt a product UI as a reusable system (35 components, tokens) — −90% styles, ×3 development speed, White Label unlocked.
- TVIP, designed multi-platform power-user UX across 5 surfaces (admin + consumer) with personas and a shared kit — structure for technical operators, not marketing pages.
- DocsBird, led 0 → 1 under ambiguity — 4-country launch, registration 7 → 3 steps, +45% conversion.

I am not a career DX designer — I am honest about that. What I transfer is systems for complex tools, design-system leverage, and designer+engineer delivery under ambiguity. HTML/CSS literacy helps me ship with engineering constraints instead of against them.

Based in Argentina (near Buenos Aires, ART UTC-3), available fully remote anywhere with overlap. Happy to tackle your design exercise and walk through WUW / TVIP / DocsBird with the team.
